1955 Memoirs Tell Eichmann Part In Death Round-Up Of Jews

Two installments from the memoirs of Adolph Eichmann, who directed the round-up of millions of European Jews for extermination by the Nazis, were published in Life. Eichmann headed a division of the Gestapo, the Nazi secret police, assigned to the extermination of Jews. He was seized in Argentina by Israeli agents this year and is awaiting trial in Israel.

The memoirs are a result of a series of 1955 interviews between Eichmann and Wilhelm Sassen, a German reporter in Buenos Aires, says the New York Times. Enlarged by footnotes and additional material written by Eichmann, the interviews fill more than 900 pages.

Eichmann met Mr. Sassen in a Buenos Aires bar. Eichmann introduced himself as Ricardo Krumey, former adjutant to Eichmann, and said he had "a very hot story" of historical interest.

Mr. Sassen invited Eichmann to his home and used a tape recorder during his interview. He said he did not know who he was interviewing until Eichmann let his name slip during a later session.

The interviews then continued, and Eichmann expanded the taped versions. In 1956 Mr. Sassen got in touch with the Time-Life correspondent in Buenos Aires about the Eichmann manuscript.

At the start of his memoirs, as Life magazine presents them, Eichmann asserts that he was "merely a little cog in the machinery that carried out the directives of the German Reich." Later, however, when telling of his assignment to the "Jewish question" by his superior, Gen. Reinhard Heydrich, he adds:

"I must confess that I did not greet this assignment with the apathy of an ox being led to his stall. On the contrary, I was fascinated by it. (General Heydrich) encouraged me to study and acquaint myself even with its theological aspects. In the end I learned to speak Hebrew, although badly."

Eichmann, who describes himself as "a man of average character with good qualities and many faults," insists that he had nothing to do with the actual killing of Jews, says the New York Times. He was responsible only for their transportation, he contends.

Eichmann comments that "at heart I am a very sensitive man." "I simply can't look at any suffering without trembling myself," he writes.

But in describing the execution of 5,000 Jews at Minsk he tells how they were made to walk into a pit where they were shot. He writes: "It was impressive to see them all jumping into the pit without offering any resistance whatsoever."

Later, riding back to Berlin, he says he was silent. "I was reflecting about the meaning of life in general," he recalls.

In Berlin he went to a Gestapo chief and complained about shooting as a method of execution. "Of necessity, our men will be educated to become sadists," Eichmann says he warned. He notes that the Gestapo chief looked at him "in a fatherly, benevolent way." "I never could figure him out," Eichmann writes.

Eichmann says he was not anti-Semitic. He opposed the Jews, he writes, only because "they were stealing the breath of life from us." Of the settlers in Palestine, which he visited before the war, he notes: "I admired their desperate will to live, the more so since I was myself an idealist."

While organizing the expulsion of Jews from Austria, he says he also worked with a number of Jewish community leaders. During the war, he notes, he was the only Gestapo man of his rank to have personal representatives in other countries of Europe. They were necessary, he says, because he did not always get the co-operation he expected.

"In France the French police helped only hesitantly," he writes. "Italy and Belgium were, by and large, failures. And in Holland, the battle for the Jews was especially hard and bitter." Despite these difficulties, he finally got the trains rolling into Germany. In Eastern Europe, he reports, he found the local regimes more co-operative.

He said the uprising in the Warsaw Ghetto made his work easier by frightening the collaborationist regimes, says the New York Times. "We could and did use the Warsaw example like a traveling salesman who sells an article all the more easily by showing a special advertising attraction," Eichmann writes.

Archbishop Says Jew And Arab Belong Together

The Archbishop of Canterbury declared in Jerusalem that the Jew and the Arab were bound to each other through their belief in a common God. In a sermon in St. Paul's Anglican Church, during a brief visit to the Israeli sector of Jerusalem, the Archbishop, the Most Rev. Geoffrey F. Fisher, cautioned that neither side could invoke God's name to its own cause, says the New York Times. "That is the final evil in the world," he said.

One hundred fifty persons crowded into the tiny old church to hear the Archbishop. Besides Anglicans there were representatives of other Christian churches in the city. There were also Jews and a few Christian Arabs.

"The Jew and the Arab belong to each other," Dr. Fisher said. "They cannot get away from each other because they are bound together under God."

Soon after his arrival from the Jordanian city of Jerusalem, Dr. Fisher visited Heichal Shlomo, seat of the Chief Rabbinate in Israel. He was greeted by Rabbi Itzhak Nissim, Chief Rabbi of the Sephardic community there, oriental Jews and those of the Spanish or Portuguese communities.

Rabbi Nissim deplored the division of Jerusalem that has made it impossible for Israeli Jews to get to holy places in the Old City under Jordanian control. It was the first political note in a visit the Archbishop had hoped would be nonpolitical.

Bnai Brith Head Charges Soviet Incites Against Jews

The executive head of the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith declared recently that there had been a "further deterioration in the position of Jews in the Soviet Union." Benjamin R. Epstein, national director of the agency, said the Soviet Union had not lessened its "harsh policies toward Jews and still seeks to isolate them, encouraging their displacement from all major sectors of public life throughout the Soviet Union."

Mr. Epstein made the statements in an address prepared for delivery at a dinner of the Czechoslovak National Council at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, in New York, says the New York Times. He accepted the Council's Jan Masaryk Award to the League "for its fight against bigotry and discrimination and its work in behalf of American democracy and human freedom."

Mr. Epstein's agency released a detailed report, "Anti-Jewish Propaganda in the Soviet Union," that is to be published soon in its periodical, Facts. The report was prepared under the supervision of Arnold Forster, the League's general counsel.

Mr. Epstein, in his address, declared Soviet policy toward Jews was "being implemented by a virulent and widespread anti-Semitic campaign in the press, which is inciting the public against Soviet Jews, who are being made to feel that they are living in an alien courtyard."

He noted that the "systematic anti-Jewish propaganda campaign mounted by the Soviet press in 1957 has not abated." There is hardly a major central or provincial newspaper or periodical that has not published at least a few — often many — anti-Semitic articles in one form or another," he said.

Among them he listed Izvestia, the Government organ; Pravda, the Communist party organ; and Trud, the central trades union organ.

The agency report said that "In 1959, in fifteen major central alone, at least seventy-seven feuilletons (feature articles) appeared which constituted virulent attacks on Judaism or on 'anti-social' individuals invariably bearing Jewish names or otherwise identified as Jews."

The report said not less than 32 per cent of the articles in Sovietskaya Latvia, published in Riga, capital of the Latvian Republic, were of this character; 20 per cent of the articles in Sovietskaya Mol-

Rocket-Fuel Expert Won Top Honours And Awards

Dr. Hermann Irving Schlesinger, internationally known educator and rocket-fuel expert, died in Billings Hospital, in Chicago, Ill., to which he was taken suffering from pneumonia. He was 77 years old.

Dr. Schlesinger was Emeritus Professor of Chemistry at the University of Chicago, and a recognized leader in jet and rocket fuel research, says the New York Times. Working with the Atomic Energy Commission, the Office of Naval Research and other Government agencies, he was a pioneer in more efficient methods to produce boron hydrides — high energy compounds — used as missile propellants.

In 1959, he was awarded the Priestly Medal, highest honor in American Chemistry, and he also was given the Willard Gibbs Medal by the society's Chicago chapter. The U.S. Navy's top civilian honor, the Distinguished Public Service Award, was conferred upon him last year.

Dr. Schlesinger was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He received Bachelor's and Doctor of Philosophy degrees from the University of Chicago and also held honorary degrees from the same school and from Bradley University.

After two years of study in Germany, Dr. Schlesinger returned to the University of Chicago in 1907 and joined the school's staff as an associate in chemistry. He became a professor in 1922, then was secretary of the Chemistry Department until 1933 and executive secretary until 1946. He had

U.S. Weekly Claims Israelis Are Hostile To Catholics

An article in Ave Maria, a national Catholic weekly magazine, said recently that Catholics in Israel constituted a "struggling minority." It said that Christian children of mixed marriages were "subject to insults, indignities, and ostracism" and that some Catholics practiced their faith in secrecy to avoid being called "traitors." The article suggested that Israeli laws on race and religion were akin to principles of Nazism, says the New York Times. It urged the Israeli Government to change its policy.

The article said children of mixed marriages were registered according to the religion and nationality of their mother, so that children of a Catholic father and a Jewish mother who were baptized as Catholics in Poland or Hungary would be declared Jewish when the family went to Israel. It said there were 1,500 mixed-marriage couples from those countries in Israel.

"What was Hitler's theory of race in its essence if not the state arbitrarily determining the racial requisites of its citizens?" the author asked. Ave Maria is published at Notre Dame, Ind., by the Holy Cross Fathers. It is not, however, a University of Notre Dame publication.

The author was given as "Philip Wagner," which, according to one of the lay editors, is a pseudonym adopted by an American Roman Catholic from trips there. The article, it was said, was based on a "careful study."

The author traced the attitude toward Catholics to "religious

Welfare President Warns Leaders To Note Era Of Changes

Irving Kane, president of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, warned Jewish leaders against ignoring the "changing character" of the American Jewish community. He noted that members of the Jewish community were now overwhelmingly native-born and said that perhaps the mood of the Jewish community was changing.

"We shall have to become accustomed," he said, "to dealing with the inquiring mind and with a community which insists upon facts and upon full disclosure — with a community that must be taken into the full confidence of those who ask for funds or it will have no confidence in them."

More than 1,500 leaders of Jewish communal organizations in the United States and Canada were in Detroit, Mich., for the four-day general assembly of the Council, which considered the basic issues that will be facing the central Jewish community organizations during the Nineteen Sixties, says the New York Times. Mr. Kane spoke at the banquet.

In his address, Mr. Kane urged American Jews "to live creatively as Jews, to fulfill our obligations to our fellow Jews here, in Israel, and in other lands, and to our fellow men everywhere; to make our maximum contribution to North American democracy; and to maintain our religious and cultural integrity."

The Profile Of The Jewish Family

BY PROFESSOR JOSHUA FISHMAN, OF THE ALBERT M. GREENFIELD CENTER FOR HUMAN RELATIONS, OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA, WRITING IN "THE JEWISH FAMILY", BOOKLET OF THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF BNAI BRITH

Any attempt to sketch a rough sociological picture of the contemporary American Jewish family as distinct from other American family groups must begin by observing that the differences are not as great as the similarities. The sweeping social and economic changes of our times have affected American families of all faiths.

Such developments as the increasing number of working wives and mothers and the vast movement to the suburbs, to name just two, have cut across faith lines. To the degree that families of every religion and ethnic background are confronted with the same problems and anxieties — some of them age-old and common to every generation, some the result of recent events — we are more alike than different.

Nevertheless, distinctions can be made. Although there are few studies based on Jewish family units as such, we can offer generalizations based on the findings of Jewish population studies and clinical and experimental studies on Jewish individuals and groups.

Statistically, what are some of the characteristics of the American Jewish family?

First, the American Jewish family is likely to reside in or near a large city. (Slightly over 87.4 percent of American Jews over the age of 14 live in urbanized areas of 250,000 population or more as compared to 53.9 per cent of Roman Catholics and 24.5 per cent of white Protestants.) As a unit, the American Jewish family is smaller than its Roman Catholic and Protestant counterparts, and the parents, on the average, are somewhat older.

These factors are interrelated. The birth rate in urban areas is lower than in rural areas for all Americans, and especially lower in certain occupational fields (clerical, sales, managerial and professional). Since Jews tend to be concentrated in urban areas, and in those occupations yielding the lowest fertility rates, they reflect these influences to a greater degree than other religious groups. The Jewish fertility rate is only 79 per cent of the national average.

These features (older parents and fewer children) of current Jewish family life in America represent a great departure. Earlier in the century, American Jews and those in Eastern Europe — from where most American Jews had recently emigrated — married younger and had larger families. If there is a rough historical parallel to the statistics of older parents and fewer children, it is with Jewish communities in pre-war Western Europe. However, a major difference within this parallel is the continued low intermarriage rate which distinguishes Jewish family life in this country.

Place three-quarters of the mixture in an eight-by-eight-by-two-inch pan. Spread the cherry pie filling on top. Roll out the rest of the dough into strips (eight); make a lattice work on top of the cherry filling. Bake at 350 degrees for three-quarters of an hour, or until light brown.

THE MARITIMES

Whereas marriages with non-Jewish partners constituted a significant percentage (and at times more than half) of marriages in many Western European communities, the Jewish mixed family ratio in the United States is roughly 7.2 percent and has remained at approximately this level for 20 years or more. The inter-marriage rate is higher for others; among Catholics it is 21.6 percent, among Protestants, 8.6 percent.

What else may be noted about American Jewish family patterns? Total marriage rates are higher and divorce rates are lower for American Jews than they are for the general American population. There is a lower rate of juvenile deliquency among Jewish adolescents, and the rate of alcoholism among American Jews is also low.

Although there are relatively few abstainers among American Jews (13 percent as compared to 21 percent among Catholics and 41 percent among Protestants), nevertheless alcoholism among Jews in America is practically non-existent. Also, the incidence of arrests for sexual offenses and the number of illegitimate births seem to be much smaller among Jews than for the general population.

Another aspect that has always been a distinguishing characteristic of American Jewish family life is the continuing respect for education and culture. The value Jews place on educational training is partly reflected in the fact that a proportionally high percentage of them attend college, post-graduate and professional schools (62 percent, as opposed to 26 percent of the general population).

Twenty-two percent of the heads of Jewish households, as reported in a 1959 survey, are college graduates and 61 per cent high school graduates. The median income was $5,954. 78 percent of the Jews were white collar workers and 18 percent were professionals. Jews likewise tend to gravitate toward those professions requiring the most advanced educational training and intellectual discipline. The above factors are also undoubtedly interrelated. The fact that statistics reveal less alcoholism, less juvenile delinquency and less sexual promiscuity on the part of American Jews may well be due to the lower incidence of broken families and the generally higher educational level.

The increasing occurrence of these social disorders (divorce, juvenile deliquency, alcoholism, sexual promiscuity) has been a source of concern to parents, teachers, religious leaders, and social scientists alike. Many have attributed it to a breakdown in family values. Certainly, the traditional customs and values of American family life have been challenged in our century by a variety of factors. Parental and religious authority has generally been brought into question.

Radio and television, reaching into almost every home, have replaced the parent as the story-teller and source of entertainment. Social service and welfare agencies have taken over many of the functions which were the sole domain of the parents or broader family group. Children and adolescents have more spending money and are the targets of advertising and merchandising campaigns.

The family as a group spends less time together. These and many other factors have done much to alter roles and responsibilities within the family. In these respects, the Jewish family in America has faced the same difficulties as other families.

However, within the Jewish family setting, certain customs, associations and values have helped the family to withstand many of the disruptive influences of modern life. By preserving these practices, the Jewish family has, in effect, preserved itself against some of the disorganization that is currently widespread in American family life.

The report said three major themes were interwoven in this press campaign: "Jews, Judaism, Israel." It added that these themes "have been harped on for four years in a vast array of articles, editorials, letters, 'news' reports, eyewitness accounts, 'scientific' analyses and feuilletons."

Mr. Epstein declared that in these articles "Judaism is attacked not only as a reactionary religion but as racist cult with suspect 'secret' practices", reports the New York Times. Other speakers included Mayor Wagner and Attorney General Louis J. Leikowitz. fanaticism," to "extreme nationalism", and to a "deeply ingrained ignorance" of the truth about Catholicism. He suggested it had roots in the belief of "misguided Christians" who linked Jewish persecution in Nazi Germany with Christians, overlooking Hitler's persecution of Catholics.

"Whatever the causes of hostility," the author said, reports the New York Times, "the fact remains that it requires no small heroism for a Catholic of Jewish origin to pursue a normal existence in Israel. In some communities, economic pressure makes it practically impossible. If the Israeli government is sensitive to world opinion, if Israel is to command the respect and esteem of Christian nations, it must do more than proclaim principles of liberty and equality in official documents."

Dr. Schlesinger was the author of a chemistry laboratory manual and had written more than sixty scientific papers.

He was an honorary member of the National Academy of Sciences and of the Bavarian Academy of Sciences, and was a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Chicago Chemists Club. He also was awarded the Alfred Stock Memorial Prize of the German Chemical Society.

The boron's were chemical curiosities until Dr. Schlesinger and an associate in 1930 found that the production of such substances could be greatly increased by means of an electrical discharge, says the New York Times. The technique opened a whole new field in chemistry and led to his synthesis of lithium aluminum hydride, another important compound.

Dr. Schlesinger's wife, the former Miss Edna Simpson, died in 1957. Surviving are two sons, Richard B., vice president and advertising manager of Carson Pirie Scott & Co., in Chicago; and Herman A., vice-president in the Minneapolis office of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, an advertising agency.

WELFARE HEAD

Mr. Kane said that Jews had achieved a higher degree of integration into American life and society than was dreamed possible. But he added that it was not the time for them to devote much time to congratulating one another.

He called for deeper understanding of Jewish communal needs and aspirations, and greater dignity in fund raising.

"Let no one under-estimate the importance of the recruitment and mobility of people as well as dollars," he said. "For many thousands who have been so involved, it has been their only Jewish commitment. Whatever the commitment of the heart, have we done enough to assure their commitment of the mind?"

Mr. Kane proposed clearer expression of social purpose in budgeting funds, and more effective use of the central community organization as an instrument for united action. He also urged delegates to give greater attention to transmitting the Jewish heritage to the youth and to developing an American-centered Jewish cultural expression.

The William J. Schroder awards, for "superior initiative and achievement in the advancement of social welfare, were presented to the National Council of Jewish Women and to the Worcester, Mass., Jewish Federation.

The Edwin Rosenberg award for outstanding community leadership was presented to four northwest Indiana Jewish leaders who successfully guided the merger efforts of three independent, organized Jewish communities into a single central community organization, the Northwest Indiana Jewish Federation, says the New York Times. The four were Benjamin Saks and Harry Nelson, of Gary; and Edward Rudin; of Hammond; and Simon Miller, of East Chicago.

Canada's record of deaths of mothers in childbirth is much lower today. This is probably due to the fact that expectant mothers usually have proper guidance during the months of waiting by regular visits to the pre-natal clinic or their own doctors.

face and the interest of his own special group, he ought not be ashamed of voting to influence policy in favor of his ethnic group, any more than he would be unhappy about voting to influence policy in favor of his occupational group. Such a clear conflict of interest is unlikely . . . The fact that one's Jewishness influences his politics is not necessarily any less American than if one's class interest or occupational interest determines his politics."

Those who so insistently disclaim the existence of a Jewish vote are obsessed by the fear of ma yomru ha'goyim? (what will the Gentiles say?). The truth of the matter is, however, that the non-Jewish American — both the man-in-the-street and his politically more sophisticated fellow citizen — does not say or think anything at all on this, for him largely abstruse issue. He accepts it as simply and as naturally as he does a score of other facts of American political life. If he ever gives any thought to this particular item, he does so not of his own volition but only because it has been forced upon him by noisy protestations coming from gratuitously apologetic Jewish leaders.

The issue is also being kept smoldering by those unholy allies, the professional Arab propagandists and the professional nuisance-makers of the American Council for Judaism. Both vociferously attack the "Jewish vote," as they see it, but they do so, it must be said, with the frustrating taste of "sour grapes" in their mouths. Both parties to the alliance are exceedingly anxious for an opportunity to use a group vote of their own to advance their particular aims and are deprived of this instrument only by the fact that the numerical size of their combined potential vote is so pathetically infinitesimal. Hence, the impotent rage, the self-righteous mouthings.

Mr. Fuchs rightly stresses that "there is no automatic formula for showing how being Jewish affects political behavior." When a candidate of "our own kind," to use Dr. Rischin's phraseology, is up for election, the Jews have distinctly shown themselves to be less parochial in their response than other special interest groups.

A Gallup poll among Catholic voters has established that more than half (52 percent) would be willing to cross party lines to vote for a candidate of their own faith. Similarly, the New York Greek newspaper Atlantis has editorially urged "voters of Hellenic origin" to remember that "all Greek votes must be cast for Greek candidates, even though such a voting procedure will require the crossing of party lines."

Jewish voters, however, have repeatedly taken a more flexible position, subordinating their ethnic loyalties towards candidates of "our own kind" to wider considerations of ethnic concern. In the 1946 Senatorial contest in New York, former Governor Herbert Lehman, nominated by the Democratic Party in an obvious attempt to secure Jewish votes, was publicly opposed by some Zionist groups because of his party's record on issues concerning Palestine; Lehman lost out to his Republican opponent, Irving Ives.

Analysing the 1956 Javits-Wagner Senatorial race, Dr. Rischin observes that "though a number of Jewish Democrats and a handful of Liberals crossed party lines to vote for Javits . . . the 'Jewish vote' stuck to Wagner" and Javits ran less well in Jewish districts than in 1954. This, says Dr. Rischin, was largely because Jewish attitudes were influenced by U.S. policies affecting Israel, a major factor with the Jewish voters in 1956, the year of Suez: "Jews felt strongly about a Middle East crisis which, more than the Iron Curtain problem, might have been managed better by those Americans who were responsible for foreign policy. In essence, theirs was a protest vote."

Interesting, too, in the contest for the Presidency that same year, Eisenhower ran slightly better in Jewish districts than in 1952, largely because of the Jewish voters' resentment against Stevenson's evasive stand during the Sinai crisis and his lack of positive understanding for Israel's position.

"When assertions are made that American Jews helped to formulate American policy in the Middle East," writes Mr. Fuchs, "(Jewish) leaders ought not to deny what is transparently clear. They should defend their right to help influence American policy in a way they think is best for the country and themselves, just as leaders of the National Association of Manufacturers would do."

There is a potent Jewish vote in the United States and there is no need to apologize for it. It is both legitimate and beneficial. Because it is essentially a free vote, controlled by no man or organization, it cannot be taken for granted nor can it be "delivered" by political bosses in exchange for concessions or promises. The Jewish vote exists. This we may say unabashedly. But, we repeat, it cannot be taken for granted. As is the case with other special interest groups that make up the American electorate, the Jewish vote, too, must be courted and won.

There Is A Jewish Vote, Legitimate And Beneficial

BY JOSEPH B. SCHECHTMAN

From the very first moments of the current election campaign, several Jewish organizations, as well as some individual Jewish leaders, have been vying with each other in "exposing the myth of a Jewish vote" in the United States.

The motivation which impels such eager disclaimers is a peculiar outgrowth of the old ghetto mentality, striving to "prove" to the non-Jewish world that Jews are politically more selfless and virtuous than any other ethnic group, that their reactions and attitudes are "purely American," and are not, perish the thought, tainted by any consideration of self-interest, even to issues of their own vital concern.

If this image of American Jewry were indeed true, the Jews would seem to be a most un-American oddity, a grotesque exception from the natural interplay of forces that rule American political life. For American democracy is an intricate mosaic of many (and, in most instances, conflicting) special interest groups — economic, religious, ethnic — which, in their totality, constitute the national body politic. These special interests are part and parcel of the common interest of the nation, which is itself the resultant of their mutual accommodation and amalgamation.

This uniquely American process — call it multilateral osmosis — is an everyday phenomenon, but it finds its most articulate and spectacular expression during election years. Each group then endeavors to make sure that its interest be not overlooked nor harmed. Each then avails itself of its fundamental democratic right — the right to cast its votes for a candidate or a party ready to endorse its aims and aspirations and, conversely, to withhold support from those not willing to do so.

Such "group voting" is one of the basic facts of our political life, a vital, commonly accepted ingredient of the political fabric. No stigma is attached to its proper use by any fair-minded American. Our two major political parties have always been aware of, and alert to, this phenomenon. When shaping their respective platforms, it is no secret that in order to secure the broadest appeal they seek to incorporate as many "special interests" planks as possible. During the 1956 Presidential campaign, both Democrats and Republicans established special "nationalities divisions." In Gary, Indiana, "I Like Ike" buttons were distributed in Polish, Ukrainian, Czech, Slovak, Lithuanian, Hungarian, Italian, Greek, Armenian, Spanish, French, Japanese and Chinese.

In the recent campaign, one of the first delegations to be received by candidate Kennedy at Hyannis Port was a 55-member delegation led by Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan, consisting of some twenty minority groups, including Rumanians, Hungarians, Ukrainians, Italians, Finns, Lithuanians, Poles, Greeks, Russians, Jews, Bulgarians, Syrians, Lebanese, Chinese and Croatians. Alert to their respective problems, Senator Kennedy discussed with them American policy in regard to the nations now captive behind the Iron Curtain.

While discarding irresponsible "liberation" promises, he firmly stated that no administration of his would ever recognize as permanent the Soviet rule of these nations. This was a major foreign policy commitment, made to minority groups with the avowed purpose of gaining their votes and their confidence.

A recent report by Dr. Moses Rischin entitled Our Own Kind: Voting by Race, Creed, or National Origin, published by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions (formerly the Fund for the Republic), firmly establishes the thesis that "the ethnic factor is second only to the economic factor in influencing an American vote."

Each ethnic group, as Dr. Rischin indicates, is widely engaged in publicizing its efforts to increase its voting strength. Negro leadership, for instance, has in the last decade carried on an intensive registration drive, and the number of registered Negro voters in New York alone is now estimated at 300,000, three-fourths of the potential. Puerto Rican organizations conducted a nation-wide campaign to register 100,000 new voters for the elections and expected that in New York City the Puerto Rican vote would reach 200,000. They significantly pointed out that in 1954, Averell Harriman was elected governor by a margin of only 11,000 votes.

Opponents of the "ethnic vote" argue, to be sure, that one ought to vote as an "American," not as a Negro-American, Irish-American or Jewish-American. But, as Lawrence H. Fuchs, in his 1956 comprehensive study, The Political Behavior of American Jews, countered: "No one says that one ought to vote as an American and not as a farmer-American or a businessman-American; the very phrases sound absurd." Furthermore:

"Unless one clearly perceives a conflict between the national wel-
